

Well as most of you may have heard by now, I didn't get picked for the USA team. On the last day, the morning started the same as all the other mornings. I got up early, ate breakfast, and headed to the gym. Only this morning started with a team meeting and an announcement about who made the team. Once the names were read, I knew that this journey was over for now.

Oddly, I did not feel sad or upset about not making the team. I was a little disappointed because I really wanted to make it, but I felt good about my effort. If given the opportunity again, I would definitely know what to do from day one. I am going to take the advice and tips they gave me to make my game better. This was an experience of a lifetime, and I feel blessed to have even been invited.

Thank you again to those who truly supported me. It just wasn't my time YET, but it will be one day. I still have the dream!

Britt.....

